President Harding Speaks on Nation's Birthday

THE most enthusiastic welcome given to President Harding since he left Washington came to him in Portland, Ore., on July 4.

Arriving on his special train, the President, seated with Mrs. Harding in the first car of a long procession of automobiles, was taken through city streets crowded with cheering people who did not stint the fervor of their greeting. The city was profusely decorated with flags and colored bunting.

Portland is called by its people "the City of Roses," and it justified its claim to the name by its floral display in honor of the President. Not only roses, but other varieties of flowers were seen everywhere along the route of the motor-car parade. Women and children carried bunches of them, men wore rosebuds as boutonnieres and automobiles were gayly decorated with floral blooms. People tossed them to the President and Mrs. Harding as they rode along through the flag-waving, hand-clapping, cheering crowds.

It was so all day. There were roses and cordiality at the Hotel Multnomah, where the President and Mrs. Harding held a reception; more roses and increased cordiality at Multnomah Field, where the President delivered a patriotic address, and roses and a hearty welcome at United States Veterans' Hospital 77, where the President and his wife said words of cheer to disabled soldiers of the World War. Everywhere the disposition was shown to let the head of the nation know that Portland was resolved not to be outdone in warm-hearted hospitality by any community that the Presidential party has visited in its tour to the Pacific Coast.

Immigration was the main theme of Mr. Harding's address at Multnomah Field. He discussed a variety of subjects in the speech delivered there. This speech had been prepared by the President after midnight as his train steamed along through Oregon. He reviewed the progress toward present-day American nationalization, and paid a sympathetic tribute to William McKinley for his part in erasing the remnant of sectional bitterness left by the Civil War.

The President took occasion in his address to declare against the effort to let down the immigration bars in order that the demand of industry for more workers could be met. He conceded that there was "need for larger manpower in renewed industrial activities," and pointed out that "our more fortunate conditions in America are attracting the longing gaze of millions in the Old World, but," he said, "I prefer waiting jobs to idle men, and I choose quality rather than quantity in future immigration."

The President made a reference to the presence of British armed forces in a celebration of American independence, something seen for the first time in history, referring to the participation of officers and men from the cruiser Curlew.

"I hope," he said in an extemporaneous interpolation, "that this bit of history which was enacted here today will prove significant. It brings home that the English-speaking peoples of this world have a common aspiration. I hope that the British and American navies will always march toward the glorious accomplishments of peace."

QUEEN OF THE SEAS

Huge liner Leviathan, newly refitted and reconditioned at a cost of $10,000,000, starting out from New York July 4 on her first trip under the new conditions for Cherbourg and Southampton. Her equipment is of the very finest kind and her furnishings are palatial. The publicity she had received from her successful attempts to break the record for speed had caused an immense demand for accommodations, and all had been sold out before the day of her departure. Hundreds of applicants were turned away at the offices and agencies of the United States Lines.

MECHANICAL BATHING AND LIFE-SAVING MACHINE

This novel contrivance recently made its appearance off one of the popular beaches of Chicago. It was invented by Rudolph Johnson and William C. Wallace of that city and is a cross between a boat and a bicycle. It is intended to fill the gap between swimming and rowing. The hull resembles that of a boat and the propellers are driven by a geared wheel with a chain and pedals. It can be utilized as a life-saving machine at beach resorts.

(International.)

AMERICA's premier liner, the Leviathan, formerly the German Vaterland, fresh from her triumph in breaking the speed record for ocean liners, gay with bunting and cheered by thousands, was escorted by airplanes and preceded down the river by a replica of the first of all steamships, the Clermont, when she left the harbor of New York on July 4 and started on her maiden trip to Cherbourg and Southampton. The big steamer carried 817 first, 450 second and 450 third-class passengers, who had paid, according to Special Commissioner Albert D. Lasker, appointed for the trip by President Harding, a total of $500,000. The liner also carried about 7,000 sacks of mail, which means an addition of $20,000 to the United States Lines.

Between 10 and 11 o'clock six of the army and navy airplanes came over from Hampton Roads and buzzed about the big liner. There would have been twenty-four planes if it had not been for the fog that hung over the coast all morning.

By the time all the visitors had left the ship there were about 10,000 persons on the pier and fully another 10,000 outside in the street, where they had a good view of the Leviathan as she was moored at her pier. Just as the liner started her giant propellers the rain came, but it did not move the majority of the enthusiastic spectators, who opened their umbrellas and joined in with the cheers of those under cover on the pier.

FUNSTON AND AGUINALDO

An interesting reminder of the troubles in the Philippines at the beginning of this century is the meeting at West Point, where both are cadets, of the sons of Funston and Aguinaldo, who are here seen swearing eternal friendship. Their fathers were military enemies, Aguinaldo, the Philippine leader, being captured after a long chase by General Funston.

The Government of Canada has given Dr. Banting an annuity of $7,500, so that he may be able to prosecute his researches.

Captain Herbert Hartley, commander of the Leviathan, was optimistic over the first voyage of his ship under the American merchant marine flag, and said he would not try to break any records. "I am going to take things easy, and expect to reach Cherbourg at noon on Tuesday, July 10," he said.

In the afternoon of July 4, while the boat was proceeding on her voyage, a portrait of President Harding by Howard Chandler Christy was unveiled by Mrs. Nicholas Longworth. Mr. Longworth in a brief address said that Mrs. Harding's portrait would also be placed on the Leviathan.

An unusual record is that possessed by the little town of Cambridge, Neb. It has within its limits thirteen pairs of twins, who are here shown. As the town only has a population of 900, its claim is plausible that it has the largest number of twins per capita of any town in the State.

GIANT QUEEN OF THE SEAS

Looking from the bridge of the giantess of the seas, the steamship Leviathan, toward the stern when the speed record of the world was being broken, the greatest impression made upon those on board during the high-speed test was that the great ship seemed to be standing still. She rested on the water as though on a bed of rock. In every respect the trial trip of the newly refitted and reconditioned liner was a brilliant success. The world's record for sustained speed was decisively beaten in the test dash of twenty-five hours. The liner averaged 27.48 knots an hour for a distance of 687 nautical miles. For six hours during this time the Leviathan sustained an average of 28 knots. The engineer of the steamer declared that the record was made under more arduous conditions than those to which any liner was ever subjected.

"If the Majestic, the world's next largest liner, were here," he said, "the Leviathan would pass her by a knot and a half every time."

A CANINE hero passed away when Wolf, the subject of many dog stories by the well-known writer, Albert Payson Terhune, died for another. The predecessor of Wolf in Mr. Terhune's stories had been Lad, a collie of far more than usual intelligence and courage. Lad was the father of Wolf, who was born ten years ago, and when Lad himself passed away Wolf took his place in the stories. One could depend on him for full loyalty and understanding. He constituted himself warden of the Terhune lawns and custodian of the driveways. When motoring parties came in, endangering the lives of the puppies playing about, Wolf at the first sign of the motor would dash down importantly in the driveway and every puppy would scurry out of harm's way. It was Wolf's habit to saunter off on a long walk every afternoon. A few nights ago in the darkness of the railroad station a nondescript dog with a hunted, homeless droop to his tail trotted on to the tracks. He paid no attention to the warning screech of the express. Wolf saw the dog and the danger. With a bark and a snap the son of Lad drove the stranger to safety but he himself got caught. He lived and died like a thoroughbred.

GOURAUD AT TOMB OF "UNKNOWN"

General Henri Gouraud, famous French leader in the World War, where he was known as the "Lion of the Argonne," saluting the tomb of America's "Unknown" soldier at Arlington Cemetery, in the vicinity of the national capital. The General had lost his right arm in battle, so that the salute perforce was accomplished with the left. He betrayed deep emotion as he stood by the tomb that symbolizes America's glorious dead. A few days previous he had made a stirring address at the Fourth of July commemoration in front of Independence Hall, Philadelphia.

PRESIDENT HARDING IN ENGINEER'S CAB ON HIS RECENT TRIP

The versatility of the President in many fields has been shown during his recent trans-continental trip on his way to Alaska. One illustration of this is shown in this picture of the Chief Executive operating the locomotive of the Olympian train of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway for a distance of fifteen miles in a mountainous district. The President displayed an intelligent interest in the working of the engine and did his work very deftly, aided by the occasional suggestions of the engineer. While most of his time on the trip has been engrossed by the preparation and delivery of important speeches on national questions, the President has still found time for a little relaxation, as for instance in a ride that he took through Zion Park, Utah, equipped with "chaps," goggles, and all of the paraphernalia of a cowboy.

THE final holding of the world's grass court tennis championship at Wimbledon, England, which came to an end on July 7, provided conclusive evidence of the supremacy of the United States among the tennis-playing nations of the world. Three Americans in an entry of over one hundred players furnished both finalists for the world's singles titles and neither one of these is the best in this country. William M. Johnston of California, the new champion, is No. 2 in our national ranking, while Francis T. Hunter of New Rochelle, runner-up for the title, occupies ninth position on the list. Only the fortunes of the blind draw kept Vincent Richards, the third American entry, out of the final, when the Yonkers court prodigy was eliminated by Johnston in the first quarter. Hunter is always at his best in Wimbledon, but against Johnston on July 7 the New Rochelle man faced the inevitable. The sort of tennis that brought him into the semi-finals two years ago, that enabled him to crush Gerald Patterson, the world's champion, at Seabright last year and to reach the final this year, could but get him four games against the invincibility of the Californian's play.

Headlong Fall of the German Mark

The catastrophic decline in the purchasing power of the German mark is graphically shown in this and accompanying pictures. The substantial house herewith shown could have been bought in 1914 for the same number of marks that is required today to buy a single pair of shoes.

A further illustration of the deplorable debasement of the German currency. Before the war this herd of 100 sheep of the best quality could have been bought for the same amount of money that today has to be expended for the small handful of wool yarn here exhibited, not weighing more than 100 grams.

It is only an ordinary horseshoe that is here shown, but it would take as many paper marks to buy it today as before the war would have purchased the handsome saddle horse here pictured. The fall of the mark has been going on with accelerated speed ever since the close of the war and the printing presses are turning out new issues every week with feverish rapidity. Where or when it will stop is a matter of conjecture.

In the days before the war a luxurious motor car similar to the above could be bought in Germany for 5,000 marks. Today it takes that much money to buy the single loaf of bread shown at the left. The mark has already gone below the level of the Austrian crown, and its only rival now in worthlessness is the ruble of Soviet Russia. Such conditions have bred speculation of the wildest kind in all classes. The rapidity of the mark's decline has been equaled only by that of the rise in prices.

Fashions at the Grand Prix

THE Grand Prix in Paris marks not only the end of the racing season but the end of the social season as well, as it is followed by an exodus to the different cures and then Deauville.

For weeks and weeks hundreds upon hundreds of midinettes have been sewing and embroidering and talking of nothing but Grand Prix, for it is on this day that the great couturiers of Paris bring forth their latest models which give the dominating notes to the season to come.

Despite the fact that the day was most threatening many organdie dresses were seen. The model on the left is one of the simplest though perhaps the most chic of the organdie type. The skirt is lavishly trimmed with appliqued motifs in bright green, red and black, as is also the Deauville kerchief, which still retains its popularity. The parasol, which matches exactly, gives the finishing touch to this colorful Summer outfit.

The two others have nothing to commend them save their extreme simplicity and brilliant color scheme. Along with the dress in the centre a large flat pocketbook of the same gayly printed crepe is carried. The Japanese parasol adds the Parisian touch to the straight-line Summer suit of white crepe, richly appliqued with brilliant motifs.

Shoes are extremely simple in line—one or two straps and frequently in bright colors to contrast with costumes. Red and green are most frequently seen, and, strangest of all for Parisians, the mode is decidedly lower heel, like that known in America as the Spanish heel.

UNDER the firm administration of President Cosgrave the new Irish Free State seems at last to have entered on an era of peace and prosperity. Republican activities have not wholly ceased and occasional disorders are reported, but these are now few and far between. Organized resistance has practically come to an end. This was indicated in papers of Eamon de Valera recently seized and made public by the Free State Government. The leader of the irreconcilables declared in these that a continued struggle in arms was unwise in the national interest and that a period of rest was necessary to prepare for a rally later on. At the same time the Republican chief of staff, Frank Aiken, ordered all ranks to dump arms "because the foreign and domestic enemies of the republic have for the moment prevailed but have not won." The glimmer of defiance here noticeable may be assumed to represent simply a desire to "save their faces" on the part of those opposed to the regularly organized and recognized State. It seems unlikely that hostilities will be resumed. The overwhelming majority of the Irish people are tired of civil strife.

As illustrative of the return to normal conditions, Ministers and members of Parliament have been moving freely about the streets of Dublin, while several have visited their constituencies for the first time since the election last year. President Cosgrave himself has traveled through the formerly disturbed district of Kilkenny without any special precautions being taken for his safety. A few months ago this would have been unthinkable.

Jolly jesters are these, a happy, rollicking group of funmakers who couldn't be serious if they tried. Not one face but is alight with the sheer joy of living as they parade the beach at the carnival held at Brighton, England.

DAUGHTER OF GERMANY'S PRESIDENT WED

Dr. Wilhelm Jaenecke and his bride, who was Amalie Ebert, only daughter of the President of the German Republic, leaving after the ceremony at the home of the bride's parents on their honeymoon. The wedding was a simple one, without ostentation, although the guests included some of the most eminent figures in Germany. The marriage is said to have been a love match.

It is probable that before long the Free State will be directly represented in this country by an envoy at Washington. This is not yet a fact because of the clause in the Anglo-Irish treaty which states that in all things not specifically defined therein "the law, practice and constitutional usage" of Canada shall determine the powers that Ireland may exercise. As the question of a Canadian diplomatic representative at Washington is awaiting settlement between Canada and Great Britain the appointment of a Free State Minister cannot yet be considered.

BULGARIAN COUP D'ETAT

Another tragedy has been added to the many that mark the history of the Balkans by the killing of Premier Stambulisky, the peasant head of the Bulgarian Government. He was shot, it is alleged, while trying to escape from the troops sent after him by the victorious revolutionists. The latter seem now to be firmly established in power. The bourgeoisie and intellectuals of the country had wearied of the Stambulisky rule, which, it was alleged, had favored the agrarian interests to the detriment of the other elements of the nation.

BULGARIAN REVOLUTIONISTS

General Lazaroff, military Governor of Sofia, the capital of Bulgaria, being carried on the shoulders of some of his adherents on the morning that the revolution broke out in Bulgaria. King Boris himself was involved in the movement and gave it his full approval. Discontent with the Stambulisky Government had been rife for a long time, and the coup d'etat that caused its overthrow represented the hostility of the bourgeoisie against the agrarian element.

GERMAN GLIDER STARTS FLIGHT FROM WATER

The Phoenix 3, the only motorless glider so constructed that it can be started from the water, photographed off the coast of East Prussia in the course of glider competitions held in that region. The glider made several successful flights and demonstrated the correctness of the principles that entered into its construction. Motorless planes are taken more seriously in Europe than in this country, and the progress that has been made in that variety of plane in Germany and France is astonishing.

GERMAN MILITARY RALLY IN MUNICH, BAVARIA

General Ludendorff with other Bavarian royalists at enormous military demonstration staged in Munich to pay honor to the Bavarian, Schlageter, who was executed in the Ruhr by the French for murder and sabotage. The news of the execution created a great stir in Germany and meetings of protest were held in all important cities of the republic. Schlageter had been arrested by the French, charged with being a ringleader of the sabotage and other disorders in that region and also accused of having taken part in the killing of French soldiers. The evidence against him was strong and he met his death before a firing squad.

UNIQUE HEARSE FOR ROMANTIC FRENCH NOVELISTS

This flower-laden boat bore the remains of Pierre Loti, the well-known French writer, to their last resting place. Loti was a member of the French Academy, a former officer of the navy and one of the most distinguished literary geniuses of France. He was steeped in love for the Orient and some of the most charming passages in literature are those that deal with his impressions of Constantinople, Japan and other countries of the Far East.

CONFISCATION OF RUSSIAN CHURCH TREASURES

Some of the tiaras of high Russian church officials which were seized in the raids of the Soviet Government and are here being shown prepared for shipment to Government headquarters in Moscow. Russian peasantry as a rule are extremely devout, and the fact that the Soviet Government was able to take these drastic measures against the church without stirring up revolution is one proof among many how firmly it is established in power. The whole policy of the Government has been atheistic.

45-FOOTER STARTS ON HAZARDOUS JOURNEY

In this small sailboat, Sowitagoht V., four Austrian yachtsmen recently started on a trip across the Atlantic. This vessel, which will be the first sailing vessel since the war to carry the Austrian flag across the ocean, was recently launched at the Lake of Constance, Germany.
